Peace Out Beanie: one last Winter hat

Thinking we could use one more new hat before the end of winter. Although according to our current forecast, it might see a half season of wear before we'd tuck it away for the year. It's currently 16 degrees F and lightly snowing: this wintry weather just keeps coming.

When Marie Greene asked if we'd like to keep her 'Peace Out Beanie' sample for another few weeks after our wintry weekend extravaganza, we couldn't say yes fast enough. Knit with three colors of Brooklyn Tweed Peerie (shown here in Beachglass, Arabesque + Mesa), it's just the hat for transitioning between seasons. (And yes, three skeins will knit multiple hats if you switch out the colors.)

A few months ago, our friend Amber Smith asked us if we'd like to host a trunk show of her newest sock collection, and needless to say, we were honored. This collection is so delicate, so exquisite, so PERFECT; knit a pair of any of these socks and you're creating an instant heirloom. We'll have these wooly socks on display for another month--we hope you stop by to peek at their unique construction, even tension and mindful details.

These samples were knit with two skeins each of Quince & Co. Finch or Tern, but we think they'd be equally lovely in Brooklyn Tweed Peerie, too.

Poison Pen by Ambrose Smith

The Poison Pen socks are named for the novel The Moving Finger, in which siblings Jerry and Joanna Burton move to the quaint village of Lymstock, where a devilish villain is harassing the townspeople with heinous letters. Jerry, with the help of Megan Hunter and Miss Marple herself, resolves to take the case! These lacy and textured socks, made with a lovely blue wool, would be perfect for a day of sleuthing, and were inspired by Megan's transformation from aimless dejection to heroic bravery.

Nemesis by Ambrose Smith

Lacy and pink, the Nemesis socks are as unassuming as Miss Marple, herself. They are knit cuff down with all-over twisted stitches and an addicting lace pattern that alternates between columns of ribs. A slip stitch heel flap and gusset, and a wedge toe make these a classic, and will ensure these socks will see you through even the toughest days of sleuthing.

What is it about the winter sky that makes our surroundings seem so much more dramatic, more fragile, more everything? We took this picture a few weeks ago at Sunset Beach in Leland after an early-morning school drop-off....we can tell the days are getting longer! Spring is--somehow--on its way.
